Description:

This training will provide knowledge and awareness on the personality domains and relationship adjustment that contribute to marital dissatisfaction and direct individuals’ behaviors. Children and adolescents are likely to experience a negative impact due to marital conflicts. The presentation will focus on how marital conflict affects children and adolescents. The presentation will also explain models and techniques used to treat couples in couples therapy, as well as methods of working with the family as a whole.

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify factors that contribute to marital satisfaction and dissatisfaction, according to the 16 PF Couple’s Counseling report.
2. Explain how marital conflict affects child and adolescent development.
3. Outline models and techniques of therapy used to treat couples and their families.

Presenter:

Drema received her Bachelor of Arts in psychology from Lynn University, her Master of Arts in counseling psychology from Immaculata University, and is expected to receive her Doctor of Psychology degree from the Florida Institute of Technology in May 2020. She received her National Board for Certified Counselors ((NCC) in 2019.

Drema has experience working in clinical practices, residential facilities, and equine-assisted therapy environments. She has delivered cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT), experiential therapy, family systems therapy, and other evidenced based treatments to children, adolescents, adults, couples, and families. Among the populations she has worked with, she has guided individuals towards self-actualization with a wide range of emotional, behavioral, and adjustment challenges.
