Description:

Non-suicidal self-injury (NSSI) is recognized as a significant public health concern. Vulnerable populations and adolescents are at elevated risk of engaging in NSSI. The presenter will lead participants in a discussion regarding non-suicidal self-injury, its prevalence, populations who are at-risk, reasons for engagement, and methods to assess and intervene. Slides will be used as a visual aid. Anonymous case study information will be shared to illustrate points. A question-and-answer session will further engage participants.

Learning Objectives:

At the conclusion of the training, participants will be able to:

- 1) Discuss prevalence rates of NSSI in adolescents and vulnerable populations.
- 2) Explain etiology and underlying factors of NSSI.
- 3) List elements essential to assessment and intervention of NSSI.
- 4)

Presenter:

Dr. Diane Kelly Andreou received her bachelor's degree from the University of Miami and her master's and doctoral degrees in clinical psychology from Nova Southeastern University. After completing her internship at the Oklahoma Department of Health, she returned to south Florida for a post-doctoral fellowship with the Child Protection Team at the University of Miami's Mailman Center for Child Development. In addition to clinical work, Dr. Kelly has worked as a training director, continuing education provider, and clinical supervisor.

Currently, Dr. Kelly is the director of the Behavioral Health Clinic at Boys Town South Florida and a clinical psychologist who specializes in cognitive-behavioral therapy and evaluation. She has worked with children and families for over 20 years, utilizing practical, evidence-supported interventions that emphasize individual and family strengths to facilitate positive change. She is also mother to an adolescent and highly invested in providing quality interventions to ensure today's kids are successful adults.
