Description

The “School to Prison Pipeline” (STPP) is series of practices and policies that funnel youth from public schools into our juvenile and criminal justice systems. STPP has been shown to disproportionately affect vulnerable populations: youth of color, youth with mental health issues, youth with educational disabilities, youth who identify as LGBTQ, and youth with histories of poverty, abuse or neglect. This presentation will provide an overview of STPP and discuss potential interventions.

There is no cost associated with this program.
