Description:

This presentation is an intermediate level presentation to help clinicians learn ways to facilitate healthy co-parenting with challenging relational dynamics. The presenter will identify the components and effects of poor co-parenting on children of varying ages and gender, as well as highlight protective factors to decrease child maladjustment. Furthermore, the presenter will provide clinical principles, interventions, and treatments pertaining to working with parents who are no longer in relationships, especially divorced couples. Case examples will be discussed to highlight appropriate implementation.

Learning Objectives:

- 1) Identify effects of poor co-parenting on child adjustment
- 2) Explain the clinical considerations for facilitating healthy co-parenting

Presenter:

Gabriella Hill, Psy.D. is a post-doctoral fellow, who obtained both her Master's Degree and Doctorate Degree in Clinical Psychology from Regent University. During her studies, she has had clinical placements at various settings, such as private practice, university-based counseling center, and community mental health agencies. Throughout these placements, she has provided psychological services to children, adolescents, and their families, which focuses on individual and familial strengths, resources, and resiliency. Additionally, her coursework and clinical experience, which included couples therapy, highlighted the importance of relational bond and effective communication for lasting relationships. Dr. Hill is currently completing her postdoctoral fellowship at the Palm Beach County Youth Services Department's Education & Training Center, where she also completed her doctoral internship, and plans to continue to address diversity factors and provide trauma-informed care to youth and their families throughout her career. Dr. Hill is also in the process of working toward certification as a PCIT Therapist.
